

Penguin Crush

Part of
The Crush Series

This book belongs to:

A plankton is a really small creature,
and in the sea it swims.

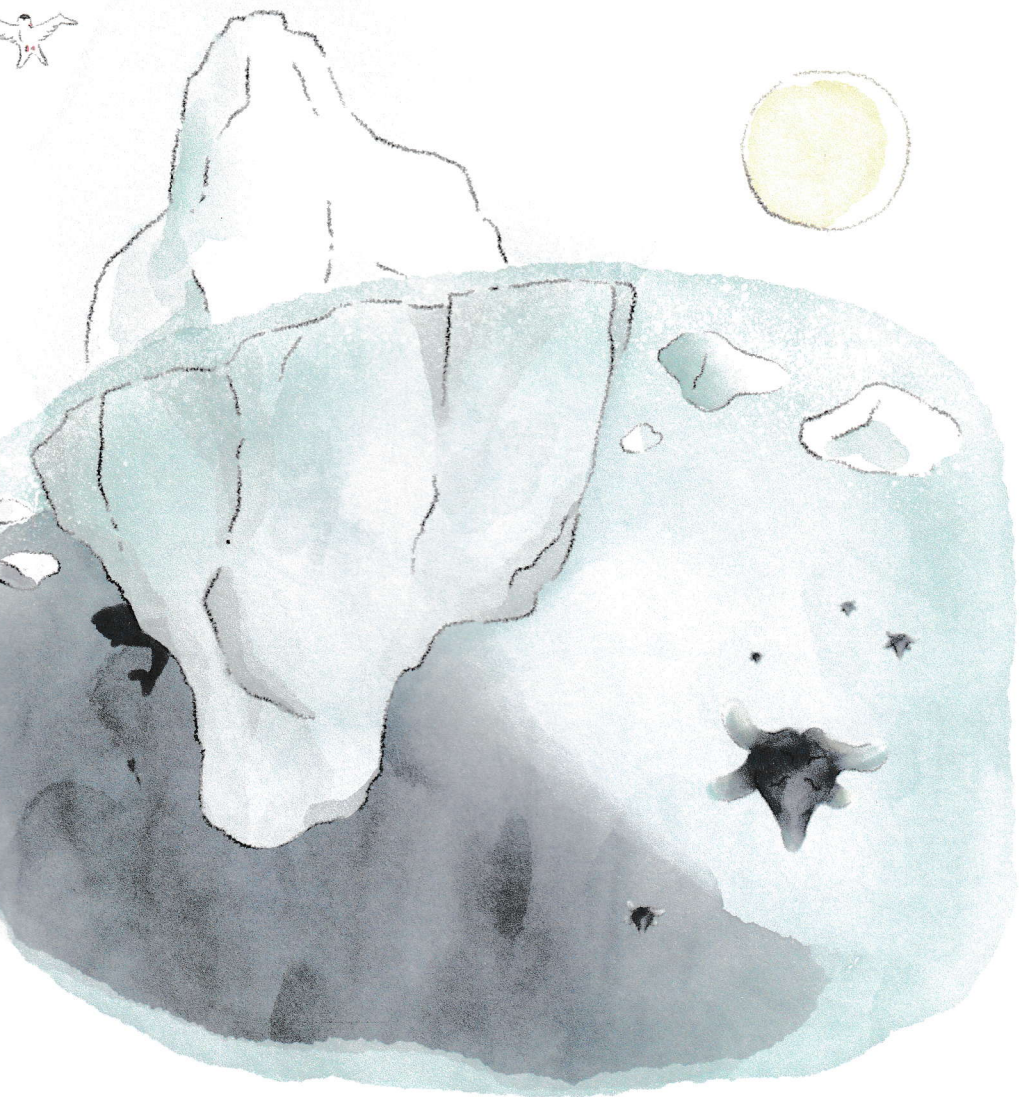

It is nothing like a fish or a whale,
as it doesn't have any fins.

It likes seaweed and it eats tiny things,
it is not like you or me.

It is so small it is hard to spot,
swimming along in the sea.

Sprats are bigger than plankton,
which is what they like to eat.
They have to eat hundreds of them,
to give their tummy a treat.

But a sprat, it must be so careful,
to avoid the bigger fish.
As small sprats are for most sea creatures,
an extremely tasty dish.

Beneath the ice and snow in the North,
a big fish swam alone.
He swam quite fast to keep himself warm,
as he was cold to the bone.

Swimming amongst the large blocks of ice,
he darted this way and that.
He searched in the water for something to eat,
he wanted to catch a sprat.
