Ice Island is the coldest place on Earth. About fifty people live in the only town called Ice Town. Polar bears are the only animals on the island.

One Monday, the explorer Jason Strong got a phone call from Ice Town.

“Can you come quickly?” the police officer asked. “There are large tracks everywhere. They look like yeti tracks. People are really afraid.”

Jason arrived that evening. On Tuesday afternoon, he found tracks.

I'll text Megan and Greg for help!

On Wednesday morning, Jason's young cousins, Megan and Greg, arrived by boat. Jason met them.

"We all know that yetis are a mystery," he said. "Their tracks look like this, I believe." He showed them a picture.

"What big feet!" said Megan.

"Now, look at this photo on my cell phone," said Jason. "I took it ten minutes ago."

"They look nearly the same!" Greg said.

"B ... b ... b ... but ... can there be a yeti on Ice Island?"

Megan asked.

"Maybe," said Jason. "We have to find out. Let's go to the Monitoring Station in the southwest of the island. I'll show you a map of Ice Island and we'll make plans for tracking the yeti. Climb into the helicopter."

The children were excited! They jumped into Jason's helicopter. WHOOSH!

"Look!" shouted Megan. "More tracks!"

Greg looked out of the window. "Those tracks are very strange and very BIG!"

From above, Ice Island looked small in the big ocean.

In the Monitoring Station, Jason sat down in front of one of the computers.

“First, I want to show you some more photos. I took them earlier this morning,” he said.

Suddenly, Greg said, “Look! There’s a poster on one of those trees in this photo.”

“Do you think those men are on Ice Island?” Megan asked.
