"This is boring," said Willow.

"Why don't you read?" said a gruff voice.

"Who said that?"

"I did, of course."

"But I can't see you," said Willow.

"Where's your imagination?" said the voice.

"Why don't you read?"

"I've read all my books."

"You can read a book more than once, you know. You might even find a book inside the book."

"A what?"

"There's always another story. When you read a book again and let your imagination take over, it can take you to new stories, so it's like a book inside the book!"

"Are you real or are you just inside my head?"

"What's inside your head is real, isn't it?" said the voice.

"I guess so!"

"Then use your imagination and you'll see me at the edge of the park," said the scratchy voice.

Willow squinted and tried hard to imagine.
