1. Do you know who Robin Hood is?
2. In which country do you think Robin Hood lived?
3. What do you think this story will be about?

In England many years ago, there was a good king. His name was Richard, and the people loved him. One day, King Richard left England. He had to fight in a war in another country. His brother, John, ruled in his place. Prince John was a bad man. He took away the houses and lands of the poor people and gave them to his friends. He killed anyone who did not obey him.

Many men had nowhere to live. Some of them lived in a forest. Prince John said they were outlaws. One of these men stood out from the rest.

“I was a rich man, and I gave to the poor,” this man told the other men. “Prince John does not like me. He took my lands and gave them to his friends. Now he wants to kill me.”

He turned to a beautiful woman who was standing by his side.

“This is Marion,” he said. “She loves me, and I love her. Her father will not let her marry me. He is afraid of Prince John, but one day we will be married.”

“What is your name?” one of the men asked.

“Call me Robin Hood. It is not my real name, but it is the name you must use.”

The men wanted a leader. They liked Robin Hood.

“We want you as our leader!” they shouted.

“Very well,” Robin Hood replied. “I will be your leader. We will live together in the forest. We will all wear green clothes. We will stay here until good King Richard returns. He will give us back our lands and houses.”

“We need some money, Robin,” one of the men said. His name was Will. “I was your servant until Prince John took your lands. I hid some of your gold in your house before we left. Let me go to your house and get it.”

“You must be careful, Will,” Robin Hood said. “The sheriff obeys the prince. He will hang you if he catches you.”

“I’ll be careful, Robin,” Will said. “I’ll take Much with me.”

Much was the youngest of the outlaws. He was a good and brave boy.

Will and Much went into the town. The sheriff's men were everywhere. They were looking for Robin Hood and the other outlaws.

5 Will and Much got into Robin's house without the sheriff's men seeing them. Will found the gold and put some of it in a bag. He gave this to Much. The boy ran off. Will put some gold and jewels under his clothes. Then he left the house.

10 Later, when Will came out of the house, the sheriff's men saw him. He tried to run away, but they caught him. They took him to the sheriff.

"Who are you? What were you doing in Robin Hood's house?" the sheriff asked him.

15 "I was his servant," Will said. "I was trying to get some of my things from his house."

"I have no quarrel with you," the sheriff said. "My quarrel is with Robin Hood. You may go."

20 Then one of the sheriff's men said, "How do we know the things are his? Perhaps they are Robin Hood's."

"You may be right," the sheriff said. "Search him!"

The men searched Will and found the gold.

"If you are a poor servant, then that gold must not be yours!" the Sheriff yelled angrily. "It is Robin Hood's."

You must be one of his men. You are an outlaw and you will hang tomorrow.”

Much was waiting for Will in the forest. When Will did not come, Much went back into town. He met a friend.

“Where is Will?” he asked him.

“The sheriff’s men took him,” the friend answered. “The sheriff will hang him tomorrow.”

Much ran back into the forest. He ran as fast as he could to the outlaws’ camp.

“Will is in prison,” he told Robin. “The sheriff will hang him tomorrow!”

“We must rescue Will,” Robin said.

The next day Robin put on a beggar’s old and dirty clothes. Then he went into town.

Robin waited near the gallows. A crowd of people was waiting. They wanted to see the hanging.

Soon the sheriff’s men brought Will from the prison. The sheriff asked, “Where is the hangman? He should be here.”

He sent one of his men to get the hangman. The man soon came back.

“The hangman is drunk,” the man said. “He cannot
